

Jae English is known among her peers as an educator's educator. She has enjoyed a long and varied career. For eleven years she maintained a private practice for professionals in crisis while also serving as Executive Director and CEO of a 501C3 not for profit, large nationally known mental health agency in Missouri. After the agency was presented with numerous local, state, national and international awards, Jae was appointed as a DMH/DADA advisor to then Governor Bond (later US Senator Bond). She became a speaker of national reputation, appearing before such audiences as the State Senate Appropriation Committee, the National Rehabilitation Convention and even wider audiences on radio and television.

During the 1990's, her position as Vice-President of the Balfour Motivational Research Institute, afforded her the opportunity to concentrate on research & study of the latest effective motivation and communication technologies toward productivity and profitability issues in corporate environments.

Jae is currently focusing her experience and expertise through innovative consulting services and advanced educational seminars using the unique and revolutionary English Motivational Enhancement Method for both individual and corporate applications.

Jae English holds the following degrees:

- Bachelor of Science Education - Central Missouri State University, Warrensburg, MO
